National Bank

Increasing capacity, improving care

Supporting NHS organisations to strengthen mental health care

The Liaison National Bank connects recently retired and peri-retired mental health professionals, with NHS providers looking to increase capacity and improve patient care.

Latest estimates put the mental health waiting list at 1.2m people. The Bank supports healthcare professionals to continue their service, leveraging their tenured experience to enhance clinical capacity and patient care.

Whilst much of the activity will be in-person, the Liaison National Bank aims to make optimal use of technology, facilitating remote care when clinically appropriate. In this way, members of the Bank can work flexibly, fitting in as much or as little as they would like, around their other interests and commitments.

We are really excited to launch the Liaison National Bank for the Mental Health sector in the coming months. It will help create additional capacity through the use of retired clinicians, and as our first step on this programme of work, we are seeking expressions of interest from both providers and clinicians.
